New showcase for contemporary sculpture to launch in the heart of Cambridge

The Fitzwilliam Museum Sculpture Promenade opening 28 April 2009

This spring, the grounds of The Fitzwilliam Museum in Cambridge will be transformed by a unique display of sculpture by some of the most accomplished artists working today.

The 2009 Fitzwilliam Museum Sculpture Promenade, sponsored by the Unex Group, inaugurates an annual exhibition of contemporary sculpture on the Museum lawns fronting Trumpington Street. This outdoor installation, opening to the public on 28 April, will offer an opportunity to experience and enjoy, free of charge, a selection of recent sculpture by members of the prestigious Royal British Society of Sculptors (RBS), creating a dynamic new focus for contemporary art in the heart of Cambridge.

The 2009 Sculpture Promenade has been organised and selected by the Director of The Fitzwilliam Museum, Dr. Timothy Potts, and the Cambridge-based sculptor Helaine Blumenfeld, Vice-President of the RBS.

Dr. Potts said:

“The Sculpture Promenade will be a great enhancement to the public face of the Fitzwilliam, animating its historic facade and bringing the energy and activity that we offer inside the Museum out onto the street. These larger works, designed for an expansive setting, will signal to passers-by that we are a museum as much concerned with the art of today as of the past. It will be an exciting new addition to the Museum’s public programmes in the University of Cambridge’s 800th anniversary year.”

Helaine Blumenfeld said:

“As Vice-President of the RBS I am particularly pleased that the Society will be collaborating with the museum on a project which so closely reflects its ethos: the promotion of the values of beauty, quality and craft in sculptural practice, encouragement of emerging sculptors and a commitment to increasing public understanding of the medium. The museum’s public profile, the visibility of the chosen site and the exciting education programme revolving around the exhibition, will create a suitable platform from which these artworks can inspire, provoke, engage and, ultimately, reach visitors of all ages and backgrounds.”

This will be the largest and most significant sculpture installation presented in the grounds of the Fitzwilliam, which receives 300,000 visitors a year. It follows the three-year display of Henry Moore’s Large Reclining Figure on the main lawn (2004 – 2007). The annual Sculpture Promenade will showcase not only the work of prominent, well-established artists but also, in some years, introduce visitors to emerging sculptors.

The unique location of the Sculpture Promenade on the Museum’s spacious lawns will make this installation a prominent feature of Trumpington Street, one of Cambridge’s most celebrated thoroughfares, inviting passers-by and visitors to walk amongst the sculptures and experience them ‘up-close’. The juxtaposition of contemporary sculpture with the Museum's neoclassical façade will make the Fitzwilliam Museum Sculpture Promenade one of Cambridge's must-see attractions

The eight artists exhibiting in the 2009 installation are David Begbie, Wu Wei-shan, Johannes von Stumm, Richard Fenton, Charles Hadcock, Diane Maclean, Terry New and Andrew Stonyer, all of whom are members of the RBS, which has a membership of over 500 professional sculptors working around the world.

The nine works on display range from figurative to more abstract constructions, diverse in their conception and structure. David Begbie's Palm I presents an outsized yet lifelike outstretched hand, moulded from a 'shell' of wiremesh, whose scale and physical presence contrast with its lack of solidity. Mother and Child by Johannes von Stumm similarly poses questions about space and 'completeness', making 'negative space' – what is sculpted out of this seated figure – the focus. The works featured explore the differing qualities and possibilities of a variety of man-made materials; from Charles Hadcock's cast-iron Caesura V, that towers over the viewer, to Diane Maclean's 2.4 metre high Open Book, constructed of stainless steel that changes colour as daylight strikes its surface from different directions; from Wu Wei-shan's Confucious, a richly textured bronze figure in the artist's distinctive 'freehand' technique, to Transformation II by Richard Fenton, which employs an everyday manmade object – ordinary plastic guttering – as a mould to produce an imposing structure. A variety of influences is also visible amongst these works: Andrew Stonyer's Rotating Circle's continues the artist's exploration of kinetic imagery, while Terry New's two sculptures Cleft and Nidus II bear the influence of New's central inspiration – the Australian landscape

The Fitzwilliam Museum Sculpture Promenade 2009 is generously sponsored by the Unex Group.

William J Gredley, Chairman of the Unex Group said:

"I have looked longingly at the wonderful space between the Museum building and Trumpington Street wondering why it was not used for displaying sculpture. Therefore the Fitzwilliam Museum was pushing at an open door when asking my Group to sponsor this exhibition. I believe the closeness of the sculpture to the passers-by will make people aware of the value of artistic works, including those within the Fitzwilliam Museum. I congratulate Dr Timothy Potts and Helaine Blumenfeld and trust that it is the first of many such exhibitions."
