

The Faculty of Arts and Humanities of the Georg August University Göttingen, Institute for Egyptology and Coptic Studies, is seeking applications for the non-tenure track position of

Assistant Professor in Egyptology

with a starting date of April 1, 2012 or later. The initial contract is for three years. After a successful performance review an extension of the contract for a second three-year-term is available.

The successful candidate will have a broad teaching and research competence in Egyptology. Professional duties include the planning, development and implementation of research projects and participation in cooperative research ventures. Candidates' research profile will ideally show a strong interdisciplinary interest and an interest in cultural history. Responsibilities also include teaching classes in Egyptian language, history and material culture in the B.A./M.A. programme in Egyptology (currently 4 hrs per semester), supervising B.A. and M.A. theses and Ph.D. dissertations in the field and contributing to teaching and curriculum development.

Further information can be found under <http://www.uni-goettingen.de/de/314509.html>.

Required qualifications: A completed Ph.D. with above-average results and further research experience are required. A strong commitment to excellence in teaching needs to be demonstrated through teaching experience or documented pedagogical ability.

Preferred qualifications: Prior participation in interdisciplinary research projects and experience in academic or research management would be considered an advantage, as would experience or interest in E-learning technologies and the ability to teach in English. German citizenship is not a prerequisite for employment, and non-German scholars are expressly invited to apply.

Closing date: 6 weeks from the publication date of this advertisement.

Please send your application (CV including publication list and documentation of teaching experience – electronic files are welcome) to:
