Christopher Le Brun Fifty Etchings 2005

20 May – 28 September 2008

A series of etchings by renowned British artist Christopher Le Brun – currently shortlisted for the Ebbsfleet 'Angel of the South' commission – is exhibited for the first time this month at The Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge.

Christopher Le Brun: Fifty Etchings 2005 will display in full the second of Le Brun's major series of Fifty Etchings published by Paragon Press (following the first series published in 1990). Made over the course of a year and employing an extraordinary variety of subtle etching techniques, this intriguing series revisits a wide range of subjects known from Le Brun's other work – such as the enigmatic horse and rider – while also introducing new themes and motifs. The sequence is carefully constructed, shaping associations and memories of literature and music as well as art. Like the questing travellers in the prints, the viewer is drawn into a metaphysical journey in search of meaning as well as beauty. This exhibition will mark the first formal display of Fifty Etchings 2005.

Christopher Le Brun said 'A year's work in 2005, the Fifty Etchings amounts to a fairly comprehensive view of my work at that time. There were several new departures which later became sculptures and paintings – the traveller pilgrim, the well, the underground chamber, the figure with a lamp, starlight, the double level – all these appearing here but long thought about without knowing quite how they originated. All for my usual purposes: enquiry, bravura, sentiment, remembering, a bit of technical showing off, and plenty of "what if?"

'Christopher Le Brun's 2005 Fifty Etchings portfolio is one of the most significant printmaking projects completed by a major British artist in the twenty-first century,' commented Craig Hartley, Senior Assistant Keeper (Prints) at The Fitzwilliam Museum. 'Much contemporary printmaking grabs attention for a few seconds with slick and shallow images, but Le Brun has invested major time in these beautifully-wrought etchings. They reward the close and careful looking that this show facilitates, revealing that the artist (with his printer Simon Marsh) has dared the medium to speak in subtly new ways.'

The exhibition also coincides with the dramatic new display in Gallery 12 of the Fitzwilliam's painting by Christopher Le Brun, The Eye's Castle, where visitors to the Museum will encounter the horse and rider once again. Reminder, the bronze medal that Le Brun designed for the British Art Medal Society, and which shares imagery in common with the print series, will also be displayed.
