Lumière

Lithographs by Odilon Redon

22 September 2009 – 10 January 2010

A new exhibition at The Fitzwilliam Museum draws on its world-class print collections to present rare and evocative works by the French Symbolist artist Odilon Redon (1840-1916).

Bringing together thirty-eight of his most significant and experimental lithographs, Lumière offers a fresh insight into these enigmatic works, which in the artist's own words, 'place us, as does music, in the ambiguous world of the indeterminate'. Redon termed these black and white images his noirs, and the selection on display represents the height of his lithographic career from 1885 to 1896 before he moved into working in colour.

Odilon Redon, Profil de Lumière, 1886

Redon had been exposed to printmaking as early as 1865 – via the artist Rodolphe Bresdin – but it was not until much later in his career that he moved into producing prints. Born in Bordeaux, Redon moved permanently to Paris after serving in the Franco-Prussian War (1870-1). He quickly became known in avant-garde circles and by the mid-1880s was a prominent member of the Symbolist movement. The fantastic creatures that populated his works made him a distinct figure in the mysterious and subjective world of Symbolism. Yet often overlooked is the importance of the printmaking technique itself to Redon's works, with dense, luminous blacks set against glowing white paper – a significance Redon himself identified, writing of the 'integral brilliance' and 'expressive power' of his noirs.

This exhibition primarily focuses upon the powerful prints from two albums by Redon based on Flaubert's novel La Tentation de Saint Antoine. Redon's increasing use of literary sources as inspiration for his print albums gave him ample scope to experiment with the medium – extracts from the text are printed as captions, and the variety of dramatic light effect and subtle textures gave full rein to his extraordinary imagination. The diverse imagery of La Tentation, with its story of the manifold supernatural temptations faced by St Anthony in the desert, allows Redon to move freely from representations of haunting visages to landscapes to intangible beings. Also featured are several stand-alone works, including Profil de Lumière, which highlights Redon's skilled draughtsmanship and the emotive power of his lithographs, created purely through the juxtaposition of light and darkness.

Celebrating his technical mastery and innovative approach to printmaking, Lumière reveals how Redon's exploration of the expressive potential of light and dark allowed him to create these ambiguous yet deeply suggestive images, which in his own words 'inspire – they do not define'.

Please note: visitors to the Museum can also see Redon's darkly surreal creation series Les Origines on display in the Fitzwilliam's acclaimed exhibition Endless Forms: Charles Darwin, Natural Science and the Visual Arts, Trumpington Street which closes 4 October 2009.
