Recent Acquisitions of Drawings and Prints

20 October 2009 – 24 January 2010

This autumn, the Fitzwilliam Museum showcases drawings and prints that have recently enriched the Fitzwilliam's world-class collections, offering an opportunity to see important works going on display for the first time.

Recent Acquisitions of Drawings and Prints (opens 20 October) brings together over thirty of these recent acquisitions, presenting a choice selection that spans six centuries. Highlights include:

- A diverse group of Italian Renaissance drawings of great beauty, including an elegant study of arms and hands attributed to Polidoro da Caravaggio. Also on display is a working drawing for a design for an embroidered hood of a cope (cape) by Palma Giovane, depicting a scene from Revelation – a highly rare surviving example of its kind, as most drawings with this function were destroyed in the process of producing the embroidery.
- Laura Tarsi (1740–41), Jean-Étienne Liotard's delicate miniature of a 'Grecian Lady' painted onto ivory. Liotard's time working in Constantinople – as well as his penchant for Ottoman-style dress – earned him the name 'the Turkish Painter', and this image reflects the desire of many of his sitters to be depicted in similarly exotic costume.
- Proofs of aquatints by Goya and Picasso, adding to the Museum's fine collection of prints by these artists. Goya's Sera lo Mismo ('It Will Be The Same', c.1810), a highly rare working proof from his powerful Disasters of War series, shows one of the atrocities suffered by the Spanish people as witnessed by the artist, while Picasso's Blind Minotaur Guided by Marie-Thérèse in a Starry Night (1934–5) is perhaps the most spectacular print from his celebrated Vollard Suite, in which the mythical half-man/half-bull embodies elements of Picasso's own relationship with his mistress Marie-Thérèse Walter.
- Garden Under Snow (1885), a rare design for a fan by Gauguin painted onto fine linen. Although Gauguin is better known for his paintings, he – like many of the Impressionist painters – was intrigued by the compositional challenge presented by the fan-shaped format, and produced over thirty fan designs.
- Dancers in the Wings (1900–05), a charcoal and pastel drawing by Degas attesting to the artist's enduring fascination with the movements and poses of dancers. Degas repeatedly studied and revised these types of figures, exploring the formal potential of a single pose often over many years, as this particular work illustrates.

Also featuring drawings and prints by artists as diverse as Guercino, Baselitz, Modigliani, Frank Auerbach and Howard Hodgkin, Recent Acquisitions illustrates the various ways that the Museum's collections are enriched through individual acts of generosity and funding bodies, sustaining the Fitzwilliam's core mission to build and develop the collections for future generations.
